About Me

In 2004 I purchased my first street bike and after a year of riding I ran a track-day event at Jennings GP. This sparked my passion and I quickly attended a school to get my racing license. I started racing in CCS FL Unlimited Superbike at the halfway mark of the 2005 season on my stock R1; winning my first race at Homestead Speedway, street body work and all from the back of the grid. After dominating the remainder of the season I made a difficult decision to request expert license status ahead of schedule in order to improve my skills.

My racing effort has been stricken with an impossibly small budget and lacking in track time. Only through the generosity of my current sponsors and their support have I been able to make this happen. I have been racing on people's throw-away tires, yet persevering to stay competitive. With the first new tire all season, I held off Robertino Pietri (Roadracing World Sponsored AMA Rider) at our last Homestead round in GTO. I am driven to compete and improve, and feel that I can rise to the challenge if given the opportunity. I am also a mechanic, fabricator and engineering student, which has allowed me to maintain and upgrade my machine into a competitive bike. I am completely devoted to this sport on a number of levels and hope to earn the opportunity to prove my potential.

Despite any adversity faced, I always try to make the best of my situation while looking forward to future goals. My philosophy is that anything worth doing is worth doing right. I believe that this makes me a great candidate to promote my sponsors. Our team keeps a professional appearance, from our pit area to how we conduct ourselves, throughout the weekend. I'd say that I am very outgoing and friendly at the track; always willing to talk with fellow racers/competitors. Much of the time this involves products I use from my sponsors, why I believe in them, etc. Job #1 is to produce results on the track. This works two-fold in the promotion of my sponsors; by giving credibility to the team, and in getting time on the mic to thank my supporters and sing the praises of their products and services.
